THE IVORYTON

A THEATRE BUILT BY CONNECTICUT INDUSTRY

In 1908, Comstock Cheney & Co., a company involved in the manufacture of ivory products, built a theatre for members of their factory workforce. Touring companies of vaudeville acts entertained the community regularly and the theatre played host to enthusiastic audiences and eager troupes.

In 1915, the silver screen found its way to the bucolic knoll of Ivoryton, and the recently built theatre captivated audiences with a new kind of entertainment that would revolutionize the business of performing arts.

The theatre flourished. Via this new medium, great stars like Rudolf Valentino, Charlie Chaplin, Lillian Gish found their way to the remote Ivoryton theatre. Milton Steifel, a Broadway stage director, launched the "Ivoryton Experiment." With an opening production of a light comedy, Mr. Steifel founded the first summer stock theatre in Connecticut and the second in the United States.

THE IVORYTON TOMORROW: A THEATRE FOR ALL SEASONS

It was during the second season that a young actress was introduced to Connecticut audiences. Her performances were met with warm enthusiasm, and she became the leading lady. Some of the plays she appeared in were "The Little Accident", "Let Us Be Gay" and "The Man Came Back" with Henry Hull.

This young actress was none other than Katharine Hepburn and the Ivoryton Theatre's early success and reputation will always bear a debt of gratitude to this talented legend.

In 1979, the Ivoryton Playhouse Foundation Inc. was established and this non-profit organization acquired the physical plant which is the Ivoryton Theatre.

The trustees reached the determination that the future of this historic theatrical landmark cannot be served by anything less than a serious fundraising effort to make it more than a summer auditorium for transient theatrical enterprises.

For concerts, dance performances, serious theatre and performing arts of all kinds, on both a national level and a local level, the community desperately needs a proper facility.

The Ivoryton Playhouse presents a rare opportunity to give to us and our children a place for performing arts: a place with roots that lend perspective to the stars of tomorrow.

Steifel succeeded. And with your help and generosity, so will we.
